

Julie Ralston Aoki, JD, works on public policy for the public good. She coordinates the Public Health Law Center's Tribal public health law and policy work and also directs the Center's Healthy Eating & Active Living team. The Center aims to support Tribal, federal, state, and local governments and organizations in using the power of law to advance health equity and develop policies grounded in community, good data, and solid legal principles. She has carried out Tribal policy and law trainings for Tribal partners and Native serving organizations across the U.S., and feels honored to be able to work with the Great Lakes Inter-Tribal Epidemiology Center and its partners on public health law and policies to advance Indigenous health. She is a past president of the Minnesota Community Health Worker Alliance Board, a volunteer member of the Robbinsdale Human Rights Commission, and the parent of three kids.
