

Dr. Jeremy Braithwaite is the co-founder of EvaluACT and also serves as a Tribal Research Specialist for the Tribal Law and Policy Institute. He has been working with American Indian/Alaska Native communities for almost 20 years on issues related to violence against women, land claims and environmental dispossession, Indian child welfare, and Tribal justice systems. Dr. Braithwaite has served as the PI on multiple National Institute of Justice (NIJ) grants focused on building the capacity of Tribal nations and organizations to design and implement high-impact research and evaluation studies that address issues of Tribal justice, healing, and wellness. He currently resides in Lake Arrowhead California.

Dr. Linda Sue Warner is a member of the Comanche Tribe of Oklahoma. She has extensive experience and knowledge in indigenous pedagogy using native ways of knowing as the primary framework. She currently serves as Special Assistant on Tribal Affairs to the President of Northeastern A & M College. Dr. Warner's degree from the University of Oklahoma-Norman is in General Administration. She has over fifty years' experience working with American Indian/Alaska Native/Native Hawaiian peoples. Dr. Warner is extensively published with over two hundred fifty articles, presentations, technical reports, books and book chapters that explore processes linked to cultural knowledge bases and pedagogy. In April 2018, Dr. Warner was honored with a career achievement award from the University of Oklahoma. Dr. Warner has two sons and three grandchildren and resides in Northeast Oklahoma.